

FOREWORD TO VOLUME X

Left in the midst of his flowers, at the close of the last volume, Mr. Burbank in this, the tenth book, continues to unfold before us, more of his transformations.

Beginning with the chapter on the means of securing the utmost variation in flowers, he continues with the Iris, the Tigridia, the Everlasting or Millinery Flower, the Larkspur, and scores of other beautiful flowering plants, more familiar in the average dooryard.

Having covered the range of his flower productions, Mr. Burbank proceeds, in this volume, to describe his improvements in ornamental palms and climbing vines, lawn plants and lawn beautification, concluding the book with a terse chapter on practical hints for the betterment of field and flower garden.
