SUGGESTIONS TO TEACHERS

It is not necessary to follow to the letter the order of teaching as given here, but we have found it desirable to produce a system for the advanced class in dressmaking by which students can be given examinations and receive credits as in other school work.

This is an incentive to faithful and continued attendance to reach a required standard of efficiency.

It has been arranged for the evening class by giving the first half of the last period to class work. The change at this time rests and relieves those not used to the work.

Recitations, written or oral, and samplers made of all the different stitches, pockets, covering cord for ornamental purposes, shirring on cord, flat shirring, tucked shirring, smocking, buttonholes, eyelets, loops, etc.

The following lesson to be given should be assigned and discussed with students to give an opportunity for home study.

Give as much time to class work as can be managed, as a large class can be handled with more satisfaction to teacher and student after these details are understood by the class.
