

Acknowledgments

Throughout the preparation of Fishes of Wisconsin many individuals gave generously of time and funds. I am deeply indebted to my hundreds of ichthyology students at the University of Wisconsin–Stevens Point, who from 1960 to 1978 collected fishes from all sectors of Wisconsin on their own time and at their own expense. Many of them learned the joys of collecting and continued supplying the project with specimens long after their course obligations had been satisfied.

Fishes of Wisconsin was initiated in earnest in 1958 as a family collecting project. Until 1967, my sons, Kenneth, Dale, and David, assisted me in securing and preserving thousands of specimens in many hundreds of collections. During the writing period from 1976 to 1979, their help persisted in the field and extended into the laboratory and the darkroom. My wife, Sylvia, helped in the preparation of the manuscript while continuing to provide for her family's countless physical and spiritual needs. Through many of the early years, the devotion of my family to the fish project remained steadfast despite our hardships with the sampling gear, our struggles with the insect pests, and our endless struggle with my tyranny. This book, therefore, is a tribute to their selflessness and persistence.

I am grateful to the following persons who read, criticized, and offered suggestions for the portions of the manuscript sent to them: Merryll Bailey, Reeve Bailey, Paul Baumann, Dale Becker, Edward Brown, Jr., Clifford Brynildson, Lyle Christenson, Tom Claflin, Dan Coble, Fred Copes, Russ Daly, Billy Davis, Don Fago, Vernon Hacker, Arthur Hasler, John Held, Robert Hunt, Marlin Johnson, Lee Kernen, George King, Gary Lutterbie, John Magnuson, Patrick Manion, Harry Moore, James Moore, Susan Nehls, Joseph Nelson, Herbert Neuenchwander, Arthur Oehmcke, Gordon Priegel, Harold Purvis, Edward Schnerberger, Paul Schultz, Howard Snow, Bruce Swanson, Stephen Taft, William Threinen, William Weiher, and LaRue Wells. For their careful attention to editorial matters, I give special thanks to Elizabeth Steinberg, Robin Whitaker, and Debra Bernardi.

The following people supplied me with specimens, information, or other materials: James Addis, Lloyd Andrews, Reeve Bailey, Paul Baumann, James Baumgart, Dale Becker, Brian Belonger, William Bodin, Henry Booke, Robert Braem, Ted Cavender, Don Dodge, Russell Dunst, Mark Ebbers, Don Fago, Arthur Fish, James Frostman, Harvey Hadland, Evald Heinonen, Russell Heizer, Ross Horrall, James Jaeger, Tom Johnson, Lee Kernan, Robert Kilcoyne, John Klingbiel, William LeGrande, Charles Long, Gary Lutterbie, Chris Madson, Edward Marks, Harold Mathiak, William McKee, Bernard Moes, Eileen Mullen, Carroll Norden, Weldon Paruch, Maryann Petesch, William Pflieger, Ronald Piening, Dennis Pratt, William Reeder, John Reynen, Harold Roberts, Don Samuelson, David Sanders, Randy Schumacher, Walter Scott, Philip Smith, Norbert Swaer, Ron Theis, Virgil Thiesfeld, William Thorn, William Threinen, Tom Thuemler, Donald Tills, Frederick Topel, Milton Trautman, John Truog, James Underhill, Walter Voight, Howard Weborg, Robert Welch, Matthew Wilgosz, and Steve Yeo.

The Wisconsin distribution maps were executed largely by Richard Duchrow, Joel Warnick, and Donna Yanda; the North American range maps by Kenneth Becker, William McKee, and Barbara Taylor. The Cartographic Laboratory at the University of Wisconsin–Madison prepared many of the other maps in this volume. The sketches of fishes in the keys were initially drafted by Tom Johnson, Stan Skutek, and Mike Tesmer. The final drawings are my own.

The black and white photographs were prepared by David Becker, Connie Frostman, Jack Lindberg, Nancy Ratner, and Randy Williams. Williams and I prepared the colored photographs of the fishes. I should also like to express my appreciation to the many people who made available color photographs and portraits; their names appear in the list of credits, p. 1023. Special thanks are due Virgil Beck, who executed the jacket illustration especially for this volume.

Early drafts of the manuscript were typed by Joey Humke, Marilyn Nelson, and Maryann Pietz; the final draft by Sylvia Becker.

This project was supported in part by the University of Wisconsin Sea Grant College Program under a grant from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, U.S. Department of Commerce, and the State of Wisconsin.